

Tuesday, November 24th from 8am -9:30am at the Hartford Hilton, I will be hosting a public forum with Connecticut health care experts to discuss women’s health care issues and health care reform legislation.

Did you know?

-In our present healthcare system women often face higher health costs than men and numerous other obstacles to obtain health insurance.

-In a recent study, more than 50 percent of women, compared with 39 percent of men, reported postponing necessary care due to cost.

- Many women are under-or uninsured due to their ineligibility for employer-based coverage, and comprehensive coverage in the individual health care market is often unavailable, prohibitively costly, or excludes key services that women need.

It is time for our nation to address these and other health care needs affecting women. I am looking forward to addressing these health care issues along with leading women in the field of health care from Connecticut and the importance of reforming the current health care system.

I look forward to seeing you on Tuesday.
